“In my experience young folks are interested in finding work that makes a difference in the world. For example my brilliant niece who has an MBA from a prestigious program in the East initially thought she had to work for a non-profit to improve the world. At 28 she is making 6 figures with Home Depot and finding meaning in her work. Much of this is related to the principles Shawn Achor lays out with respect to her relationships in the workplace. She has also found camaraderie in effecting policy changes that have positive impact on the environment and consumer. The major point I will emphasize is never underestimate the possibility of the impact of your efforts in making a difference. Opportunities for making a difference are everywhere!”
